Pratik Gandhi and his wife Bhamini Oza Gandhi will soon start shooting for a Gujarati film, in which they will be sharing screen space for the first time. Even though the two have worked with each other in plays a couple of times earlier, this is the first time they are doing a film together. And Pratik Gandhi couldn't be happier. He says, "I am really excited to share screen space with Bhamini. We have worked together in plays a few times earlier, but it never happened before where we could do a film together. And now that things have worked out, I am really looking forward to start filming."

If everything goes as planned, the two actors will start shooting for the film in the first week of May. The film is a romantic drama and it will involve several romantic sequences, although not the typical kinds, says Pratik. "It is a romantic film, but not a typical love story. It is very intense and involves a lot of emotions. I hope we are able to do justice to it," he says. Ask him if he feels excited about romancing with his wife on-screen and he gushes, "The kind of relationship we share, it is very open and I can talk to her about anything. So, I think we will have a lot of exchange of ideas and inputs as the film goes along. It will be a very different experience to be romancing someone I know so well. So, I am really looking forward to it."

Pratik, who has a lot on his platter in terms of new projects, says that Gujarati films will never take a back seat. "I have a few Bollywood projects in hand, but Gujarati films will never take a back seat for me. Even when I was lining up my upcoming projects, I planned them in such a way that I finish my Gujarati film with Bhamini first," he says.
